

The internal market in the EU is now a reality. It is based on a fundamental freedom, and historical matrix: the free movement of goods. This course aims at identifying the foundations, content and scope of this freedom through the praetorian work and through the standards developed by the European legislator. This course also develops the freedom to provide services, freedom whose potential is largely exploited by the directive “service” of December 2006. Other freedoms of movement are discussed in the second semester.
