

This course aims at analyzing the historical foundations of Western political. We'll study how the power - its origins, its exercise - was developed through the centuries, by comparing the ideas with the institutional reality of their time. This semester will be devoted to the first presentation of the major currents of thought and the ancient Christian heritage. We will then discuss medieval political thought before considering the upheavals of modern times leading to intellectual movement of the Enlightenment.