

This course will continue the discussion started in the first half but it may be followed by students who have not opted for the teaching of History of Political Ideas 1. This semester will be devoted to contemporary political ideas that followed in particular the revolution of 1789. The main currents of political thought in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries will be discussed even in their most contemporary extensions.