

Primarily European institutions, are characterized by the number and diversity of their missions and structures. Among these institutions, European Union, by the choice of the integration is the most complete model of supranational organization based on shared sovereignty between Member States (I). With its Constitutional Charter, the Union and its institutional law contribute to the political and economic unification of the Old Continent (II). In this perspective, the EU also aims at strengthening institutional political and legal links, with the Council of Europe. The first mission of this one is to ensure the rule of law and democracy (III).
